ENDOMETRIAL HYPERPLASIA

OBGY and Pathology

TYPES OF ENDOMETRIAL HYPERPLASIA

Endometrial
Hyperplasia
with atypia

Endometrial hyperplasia "with atypia" means that the sampled cells are crowded, and look disorganized under a microscope. This suggests a closer resemblance to a cancer. The risk of progressing to endometrial cancer is up to 40% in these cases, and many will have a co-existing endometrial cancer that just wasn't detected during tissue sampling.

Endometrial
Hyperplasia
without atypia

Endometrial hyperplasia "without atypia" suggests that while the cells are more crowded, they still look normal under the microscope. The risk of progressing to endometrial cancer is approximately 1% in these cases.
